

Chief of Police

London's growing population of more than 400,000 makes it the urban hub of Southwestern Ontario. With its diverse economy, thriving healthcare and post-secondary institutions, the City of London offers an exceptional quality of life. As with many city centres, London faces complex social issues, such as drug use, mental health, homelessness, and poverty, many of which police are called on to assist. After more than 30 years of dedication and service, London's Police Chief is retiring. The London Police Service is now seeking a new Police Chief to continue to advance the strategic priorities of community safety, community well-being, and organizational capacity.

Reporting to the London Police Services Board, the Chief of Police has responsibility for managing the operations and administration of the London Police Service's 838 police, civilian staff, and cadets, and a $102M net budget. The Chief of Police implements the Board's 2019-2021 business plan with a vision for a safer London.

The ideal candidate possesses several years of experience within an urban environment and exhibits the values of the London Police Service in both deeds and words. You have led long-term planning initiatives and stewarded significant financial resources. You understand contemporary policing challenges and demonstrate the ability to act strategically and cooperatively with a wide range of community partners. You are well respected and admired by your peers for your relationship skills, effective delivery of police services, and high ethical standards. You fully appreciate the accountability and transparency required of this role and strive to act each day with integrity, humility, and inclusiveness.
